Fall 2018

Providence Hospice is dedicated to providing compassionate care and end-of-life services to patients and their families in Waco, Mexia, Whitney, and surrounding communities.

The Gift of Comfort: COMMUNITY CARE IS THE POWER TO SAY YES TO NEED

One was a professional woman whose life savings were consumed by cancer.

Another was a teacher unable to afford the cost of COBRA benefits when she could no longer work.

Yet another was a hard-working, self-employed husband and father.

These are just a few of the patients who have turned to Providence Hospice in need.

For each, relief from pain and loneliness at the end of life was a gift you gave through our Community Care program, which will provide an estimated $1.5 million in non-reimbursed care this year.

Community Care ensures access to the comfort of hospice care and gives team members like Parrish Horton, Senior Director of Clinical Operations, the power to say yes when families have nowhere else to turn.

She remembers a recent call from a wife desperate to find care for her dying husband. Others had turned the couple away because her husband was uninsured, but hearing Providence Hospice would admit him regardless of insurance status or ability to pay, "she cried and cried" with relief, Horton said.

That is a difference that makes working for Providence Hospice, part of the largest not-for-profit hospice in Texas, a calling for members of our patient care teams.

In the following pages, you'll learn how Community Care has touched the life of just one them.

While the costs—from salaries for our nurses and supporting teams, medication and medical supplies to memory gifts—add up, so do gifts from donors, foundations and guests at our Life's Hope Luncheon each fall. Look inside for a preview of the Life's Hope Luncheon and give the power to say yes when care matters most.

FROM THE CEO

Providence Hospice can afford to be generous, thanks to you.

You and donors like you have given so generously to Providence Hospice over the past year, we have the confidence to offer an estimated $1.5 million in end-of-life care for people in financial need this year through our Community Care program.

Community Care makes our services available to families in need, and through it your generosity returns to the community as gifts of loving care for our patients, gifts of companionship and encouragement for their families, and the gift of peace for all who take comfort in knowing compassionate end-of-life care is available, regardless of an individual or family's ability to pay.

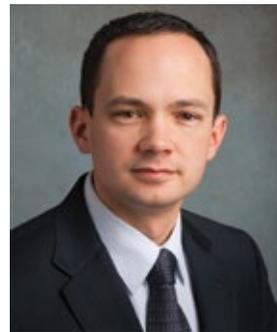

Because it gives comfort with no strings attached, Community Care is a source of tremendous pride for our staff as well. That is why Providence Hospice team members strive to support one uninsured patient a day, 365 days per year, through employee giving.

Yet even that would be impossible without you. Our partnership with donors, volunteers and the many families who have experienced the gifts of Providence Hospice care will always be our greatest asset. Thank you for the indescribable difference you make this and every year through your support of Providence Hospice.

In partnership,

Viki

Community Care LIGHTENED THE BURDENS OF A HUSBAND AND FATHER'S LAST DAYS

Steve Bohannon (front row, center) and other members of "Team Nichols" returned to the Texas coast, site of many a family gathering, to remember John Nichols.

Steve Bohannon had just accepted a job as field nurse on the Providence Hospice Waco team when his wife called to say she was taking her 37-year-old son, John Nichols, to the emergency room.

Over the year that followed—one filled with surgeries, treatments and tough calls—Steve believes he became a better nurse. First he would become a family caregiver.

John was diagnosed with glioblastoma, a grim finding. Even with aggressive treatment, life expectancy is 12 to 15 months.

"My wife is a nurse as well, so we were not under any illusions," Steve said. "But John remained completely positive."

The young husband and father of four was quickly transferred to a Dallas hospital for the first of three surgeries. Already on temporary disability, he was only halfway through the 24-month period required to qualify for Medicaid coverage. This proud man had worked the whole of his adult life but now, uninsured and unemployed, he became a charity patient.

After a year of surgeries, chemotherapy and radiation, John was losing more ground than he had gained. The family had a hard conversation and agreed from that moment their goal would be quality of life. When the time came for hospice, Steve approached his boss, Audie Williams.

Providence Hospice was his stepson's only option, Steve explained. Providence Hospice provides care regardless of ability to pay through the Community Care program.

"She said 'that's not a problem. That's what we do,'" Steve remembered. "It was a huge blessing."

In the heartbreaking final days of a loved one's life, many families struggle under a mountain of debt accumulated in the course of serious illness. Thanks to the Community Care program, families like John's are spared one more expense.

"There were still lots of bills, and people were donating money right and left—my parents paid their mortgage for one year—and all of those gifts covered lots of expenses, but not having that one last bill really helped," Steve said.

Steve has grown with the company over the years since and today is patient care manager at Providence Hospice Place, one of three hospice houses providing inpatient care in the Providence Hospice family. He sees his family's story of Community Care as an essential part of his training.

"Having that experience on the family side, I have a much better appreciation of how much (Community Care) means to the family," Steve said. "It's a comfort knowing we're not alone."
